Study in Australia is the Australian Government's official resource for international students.

The Study in Australia website has been around in various forms since 2000. But our mandate has not changed, we are the trusted source of information for prospective international students, their families and agents to learn more about Australia as a place to study.

We take this role seriously and we do it in partnership with a range of other government agencies and information providers who share our goal.

Our website contains carefully curated, practical and reliable information to help students make informed decisions about where they'd like to study in Australia, which course and institution best suits their needs, and what the experience can be like when they live and study here.

It also sets out to reassure prospective students about the laws, legislations and specialist services in place in Australia, which ensure every individual feels safe, welcomed, supported and protected for the entire time they're in Australia.

You can rely on the Australian Government - through this website and via our offices in every state in Australia - to help you understand your rights and responsibilities on issues as diverse as visas, employment, and tuition fees - and to look after you every step of your journey.

Study Australia Partnership

All Australian state and territory study destinations work in partnership with Austrade and other Australian government agencies to deliver information and services to international students. This marketing alliance is called the Study Australia Partnership. We are working together to improve coordination of key information for students and agents.

The Study Australia website is just one way we are collaborating. Study Australia partners deliver important services, localised to the needs of their student communities and integrated with other business and community services. Visit each of our partners via the links below.

Over many decades, Australia has hosted hundreds of thousands of international students from almost every nation, and at every level: in schools, in vocational education and training, at undergraduate and postgraduate level at universities, and in advanced research.

Every year, the government conducts extensive research to discover exactly what international students want from their Australian study experience. More than 100,000 international students have already shared their opinions. These research findings are used to update and improve every aspect of what we offer, so that the quality of the experience continues to be among the very best in the world.

This site is managed by Austrade - the Australian Trade and Investment Commission - and contains links to other official Federal and State Government departments and authorities. Lugar de postulación y Application process

documentación a presentar:

The first step is to apply for the course you want. There are two ways to apply:

1. Direct to the education provider

To apply direct, download the application form from the education provider's website. If you are applying for courses at more than one institution, you will need to submit a separate application to each institution.

2. Through an Australian education agent

Most institutions partner with a number of agents. Details on the agents an institution works with can be found on their website or by contacting them directly.

You will need to prepare supporting documentation to send with your application. The documents vary depending on the course, provider and qualification you're studying for. The most important documents include:

Certificates that verify your previous study, including qualifications you already have.

Evidence of your English language proficiency.

Certificates or documents which verify previous study or work experience if you are seeking course credits. These must be translated into English.

Receiving your Letter of Offer

If your application is successful, you will receive a 'Letter of Offer'. To confirm your offer you must respond to this letter by signing and sending an acceptance of offer back to the institution. This can usually be done by mail or, in some cases, by scanning and emailing the letter. The Letter of Offer is a contract between you and the institution. It sets out the course you will be enrolled in, enrolment conditions, the fees you need to pay, and the refund payable if you don't complete your course with that provider. This contract is very important – if you don't start your course, or finish your course, this written agreement will be used to determine if you will receive a refund.

Tip:

Read the Letter of Offer carefully before you accept it.

Make sure that you understand all your rights, including the refund arrangements.

Do not accept the Letter of Offer if you are not happy with any of its terms.

Keep a copy of the Letter of Offer. You will need this copy so that you are aware of your rights and if you have to make a claim against the institution.

Confirmation of Enrolment

After you have accepted your Offer and paid your deposit you will receive an 'Electronic Confirmation of Enrolment' (eCoE) by email. This will outline your course start date, total course fees and how long your course will run for.

Visa application

If you are applying for your Student Visa through the Department of Home Affairs online lodgement facility, you will need the details of your electronic Confirmation of Enrolment to lodge your visa application. If you are lodging a paper visa application you must provide the electronic Confirmation of Enrolment prior to the visa being granted.

Generally, secondary school exchange students and students sponsored by either Department of Foreign Affairs or the Department of Defence are the only students who will not require a confirmation of enrolment certificate.

You should make sure that you meet requirements for a student visa before you accept an offer and pay any tuition fees.
